

Intense Pulsed Light

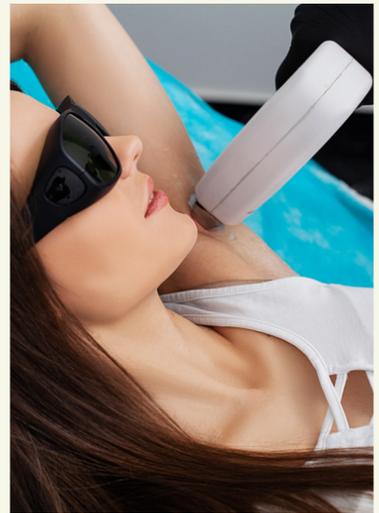

What is it?

IPL provides hair removal and skin rejuvenation results. The intense pulsed light targets and destroys melanocytes (dark pigment molecules) such as dark hair and sun spots or age spots using heat. IPL does not aid in reducing light or white hair. IPL is typically referred to as LASER because the procedure seems similar and provides similar results, however, IPL is much more comfortable, needing no numbing cream and requires little to no downtime.

Does it hurt?

IPL is a much more comfortable alternative to traditional Laser or sugaring and waxing options. Every person's tolerance and reactions are different. Typically it feels strange and warm but incredibly bearable in comparison to other options. Some people feel nothing at all.

How long does it take and how many sessions do I need?

Appointments take 15-60 minutes depending on the treatment area size. Appointments must be done 4-6 weeks apart for best results. A consecutive and consistent series of 5-8 treatments are usually needed to achieve desired results.

How long does it last?

Once you achieve desired results, those melanocytes (hair follicles and skin pigmentation) are destroyed. Hormones, medications, health conditions and certain diseases or disorders may cause new hair follicles to form in the future, and additionally those factors as well as the sun can cause pigmentation (sun spots) to appear again.

Some clients never have to return after a series of treatments and some come for a few treatments a year to maintain results.

Is there healing or downtime?

IPL is a non-invasive treatment that requires little to no downtime. With most treatments, you can basically return to your regular routine as normal the same day with a few small exceptions. Please book a free consultation to discuss any aftercare needed based on your particular treatment.

Do I need a consultation?

We strongly recommend consultations to determine a treatment plan and ensure you are a candidate for treatments. Feel free to view the consent form on our website to give you an idea if you might be a candidate for IPL.
